Paithfulness of a Dog.

Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont, in her story of "The Guard," a body of young men who followed "The Pathfinder" record for their courage and gallantry tells a pathetic little story of a dumi beast who also was loyal and courageous.

While the guard-a body of cavalrywas drilling one day near St. Louis, a little fox terrier followed one of the men, Herr Wisa, a Hungarian officer, going with him to camp. He could not be driven away.

The men all made a pet of him and named him the "Corporal;" but, though he was affable to them all, he made the Hungarian soldier his companion and friend, sleeping at his feet at night and following him by day.

When the guard made their memora ble charge at Springfield, Mo., the "Corporal" charged with them, keeping beside his master's horse throughout the battle Herr Wisa was wounded and fell appar ently dead in a thicket. The corps swept past, his borse fled, wild with terror, but the little "Corporal" nestled close beside him, licking his face and trying

There the dog remained through the bitter cold night. When morning came, he ran to the distant read, and by his frantic barks and cries induced a passer by to enter the thicket.

The man, seeing only a cold, stiff body, supposed the soldier to be dead and would have hurried on, but the "Corproal" furiously drove him back and would not be silenced until he saw his master move and speak, when he scrouched, dumb and contented, at his

Drake's Drink.

The Chicago Post tells a number of characteristic stories about the late John B. Drake, for so many years proprietor of the Grand Pacific hotel, Chicago. On one occasion a traveling man saw him go into the little room behind the key box frame and drink some water, as was his habit, and he accosted the little man: "Say, John, why don't you patronize the bar-drink mineral water, eider or some such thing, instead of that plain water? If I owned this place, I'd have the best, you can bet."

"I had to break the ice out of the water bucket winter mornings and melt it to get a drink," replied Mr. Drake, when I was a boy, and somehow just plain, clear water out of a white pitcher

"How long have you been with John B. Drake, Henry?" asked a big politician of the parlor floor colored man.

"Thirty years," said Henry Bradley, "and I hope I'll be with him 30 years longer. He always keeps his old hands." Henry was in the employ of Mr. Drake to the time of the hotel man's death.

A Stemory of St. Helena.

When Napoleon Bonaparte arrived at St. Helena, he was in a pretty had hu-mor. His valet had forgotten to put any cigarettes in his grip, there was no beer on the ship, and one of the midshipmen had put a lot of red pepper into his sunfi. He hadn't slept well either, as the captain's pet rooster woke him up by crowing panetually at 3:30 o'clock every morning. As he stepped ashore he fell into the usual pose, one hand on the pit of his stomach and the other just be-low his kidneys.

Seeing his abstraction, the faithful

Dr. O'Mears approached and said: "Well, size, what do you think of the prospect? '

"From the looks of things," replied the great emperor, gazing thoughtfully at the huge masses of stone and the frowning cliffs, "from the looks of things, I imagine that we are going to have a pretty rocky time of it."—Flori-da Times-Union.

Had the Last Word.

A group of children were going home from school. They were little girls be-tween the ages of 7 and 10 years, and, following the example of their older sisters, were discussing their clothes.

"I have a lovely new dress that I am going to wear to church next Sanday," aid one of them.
"Pooh!" said a little one with brown

"I have got a new hat, and I'm going to wear it every day." This was too much for the little girl who was clothed the most shabbily in the party, and she said:

"I don't care. I have got heart disence, anyway.

And the others looked enviously at her. -- Chicago Chronicle.

RUSSIA'S COMMERCE DESTROYERS SPOILING FOR SOMETHING TO DO.

But They Had Better Not Step on the British Liou's Tall-Possibility of a Russo Angle Alliance - A Naval Officer's Views

Washington, Jan 22.—[Special.]—A suggestion which has met with much favor here is that the government of the United States erect in Washington a statue to General Simon Bolivar, the liberator of Venezueia. It is by this time generally Venezuela. It is by this time generally known that in Caracas, the capital of Venezuela. It is by this time generally known that in Caracas, the capital of Venezuela there is a handsome statue of General Washington erected by the admirers in that country of the Father of Our Country. It is a bronze statue, and every anniversary of the birth of Washington it is decorated with flowers amid appropriate ceremonies. If any foreign born hero deserved to have his fame commemorated in the American capital it is certainly Bolivar, who was among the greatest men this hemisphere has produced. Henry Clay, with his usual folicity, called Bolivar "the George Washington of South America." Bolivar was not only a great warrior, but a great civilian leader. He made Venezuela what it is, and history records of him the pleasant fact that when a grateful people made him a gift of $1,000,000, he at once used the money in purchasing the freedom of 1,000 slaves. A coincidence which impressed the Venezuelans greasly which impressed the Venezuelans greasly was that the message of President Cleve-land, announcing to the world our inter-vention with the Morrose doctrine in be-half of that country against England, was

It is held that it would be a graceful act for the American congress to recognize the exalted character and distinguished services of Bolivar, and also reciprocate the honor paid our own Washington by the Venezuelans, by appropriating money for the erection of a statue to Bolivar in the capital of this republic. There is a statue of Bolivar in Central park, New York, but not even a bust of him exists in Washington. So far no foreigner has had a statue erected in his honor in this city, but in the national valhalla, as the gallery of statuary in the capitol is sometimes called, statuary in the capitol is sometimes called is a bust of Kosciusko. If there is no prec edent in favor of the erection of an out door statue to a foreign hero, there is cer tainly no good reason why such a prece-dent should not now be established, and the suggestion has met with a favorable response here.

The Dogs of War. For some weeks statesmen and diplo matists here have been eagerly watching the field of foreign politics. The chance of war between Germany and England, the intentions of Russia and of France and the dreadful situation in the Levan have all formed topics of frequent discus-sion. A naval officer told me that he be lieved Russia and England would soon come to blows, and he told me of a remarkable map which the Russian authorities had some time ago made with infinite patience and care. They prepared a chart of the world's commerce, showing the lanes through which it passed and indicating by spheres the points at which the tennage appeared greatest. One of the largest of these spheres was near the en-trance to the Irish sea. Another large one was in the English channel. Still another was in the Mediterranean, near the en-trance to the Sucz canal. But the largest sphere of all, indicating that at that point the movement of commercial tonnage was greatest and that there could be found greatest and that there could be found the richest mark for Russia's cruisers and commerce destroyers, was off the southern shore of Long Island. In other words, the keen Russians had made a chart of the spots at which the commerce of the world was most vulnerable, and at which they could do the most damage in case they should decide to let slip the dogs of war. Another peculiar fact was given me by this naval officer. He said the Russian mayal authorities had some time ago made soundings of the deep bays along the coast of Maine. Along that coast, as is well in these bays in order to be able to report known, there is a great number of small, deep bays, in which ships of war could lie safely at anchor. The Russian naval representatives made soundings and surveys in these bays in order to be able to report to their superiors. At this very moment the Russians are in possession of all the data necessary to their operations along that coast. No one believes this information was gathered with any idea of using it against the United States, but wholly for use against England in case of war. It is remembered that at Halifax the English have a fortified naval station, and it is from that point they would send out their fleets in the western waters. It is sur-mised by the experts that the Russians prepared themselves for a rendezvous along the Maine coast in order to be the better able to prey upon English transatlantic commerce (for most of the tonnage passing Long Island is in English bottoms), and also from those safe havens to make an at-tack upon Halifax.

Peace or War?
Still another view which I have heard exploited much of late by well informed diplomats is that Russia and England will soon make an alliance, offensive and desoon make an alliance, offensive and defensive. It is pointed out that these two great nations are not really rivals in any general sense. They are rivals only where their frontiers chance to come together in Asia. The absence of rivalry between them is on account of the difference between their national policies. Russia has no colonies and little foreign commerce. She seeks no over sea power. She is not a rival of England in colonization and trade, as Germany is. On the other hand, Rusrival of England in colonization and trade, as Germany is. On the other hand, Russia's policy has always been a land policy. If Russia and England go to war, they will eat one another up. If, on the other hand, they make peace, together they can rule the world, the one being invincible on the sea and the other well nigh invincible on land. Together they could solve the Turkish problem. They could dismember the sultan's empire, restore order in Armenia, and bring about a better state of things through all Asia Minor.

Great indignation was caused here by the prenunciamento of the Turkish government to the effect that the Hed Cross society would not be permitted to distribernment to the effect that the Red Cross society would not be permitted to distribute money and supplies to the suffering people of Armenia. That ediet was felt to be an insult to the civilized world. It is well known that the fear of the sublimely impudent porto was that under the guise of distribution the Red Cross society would make an investigation of the condition of affairs prevailing in Asia Minor and report to the world. It is the talk in inside circles of this government that but for our polky of nonintervention in foreign affairs we would surely go over to Turkey and make an effort to compel the porte to and make an effort to compel the porte to give Armenia protection, and it is not im-possible we may do so anyway. We may at least ask the European powers to bestir themselves. WALTER WELLMAN.
